LADIES CLUB ENTERTAINED AT OLD BRICK MANSION

On October 24, forty five members of the Ladies Club journeyed to Middle Intervale.

The occasion was a response to an invitation for the weekly meeting to be held at the old Carter Mansion. The hostesses were Miss Grace Carter and Mrs. Edward P. Lyon.

The day was pleasant with just enough of a hint of cold weather to make the open fires extra cheerful. The historic old brick house was at its best. Priceless treasures of brass, china, mahogany and art were admired by the visitors.

A program, arranged by Mrs. Henry Hastings and Mrs. Arthur Herick was enjoyed. In the guessing contest Mrs. Dana Philbrook received first prize and Mrs. Frank E. Hanson, second. Catherine Lyon sang a solo and encore, accompanied by Katherine Herick at the piano.

Time passed too quickly, and at twilight, tea was served. Mrs. Alphonse Van Den Kerkoven poured and Mrs. John H. Carter, Miss Frances Carter and Miss Catherine Sention helped. Delicious orange biscuits and tarts with assorted cake and bon bons were served by Mrs. Edward Lyon, Mrs. Clarence W. Hall and Miss Harriet Merrill. All were agreed that this was a red letter day in the annals of many pleasant events.

PROMINENT SPEAKERS AT ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

"New England Business Management" will be the subject of Henry S. Denison, president of the Denison Manufacturing Co. of Framingham, Mass., at the state's Second Annual Economic Conference which the Maine Development Commission is sponsoring at Lewiston on Friday and Saturday. Mr. Denison is one of the outstanding figures in the business life of the United States. He has developed his company from a concern of modest proportions to one of the greatest organizations in the world, and his advice to Maine manufacturers ought to be sound. In addition to building up his business he has found time to write several works on management and economics. He is a member of the American Economic Society, the Foreign Policy Association, a former President of the Taylor Society, a member of the International Management Institute and of the American Statistical Association, and a director of the American Management Association.

For all his youthful appearance, James W. Milford is Chief Research Specialist of the U. S. Department of Commerce, Domestic Division. Most fortunate was she in finding to her precious needs such a faithful friend as Mrs. William H. Ballou, and never was there a more devoted and considerate friend than that Mrs. William H. Ballou, who was so devoted to the very last.

And now this life, with such share of contrasts as she had known, has been learned to great peace and calm. The comfortable resignation of those who have passed through great tribulation, and who have found passing days in sweet peace, with smiling lips, and a heart that has followed the path of duty and devotion, is a comfort to those who are left.

MRS. JOHN KITTEDGE

A Remembrance

Over eighty years ago a lovely girl-baby came into one of Bethel's solid old families. Already three handsome boys had established a family life; upon this background the little sister was like a delicate flower.

In the home there was an old-time New England mother, one of those in whom the high ambitions of life burned brightly and with the unappetized hunger of a woman with ideals she poured into the little life what she herself had longed to attain. No sacrifice was too great for this daughter.

In these years she was the only girl in Bethel for whom a governess was provided. A teacher in music, in drawing and in painting was added to her studies. The first step up in love of the arts was given by the gracious, gifted mother of Dr. William Rogers Chapman, whose artistic nature generously overflowed upon groups of girls she inspired.

Fannie Bartlett was one of this group and was a little "princess" to the younger girls in the village for she was beautiful, exquisitely dainty in appearance, demure and refined in speech and manner. Her piano playing was, of course, above the average and bits of her paintings are still cherished. Throughout her girlhood frequent visits to New York, added the charm of a wider horizon and when a handsome, sturdy lover, the late Mr. John Kittredge of Taunton, Mass., claimed her, the village felt a great sympathy in the natural development of such a union to a more life.

Her married life was one of beautiful harmony. Her tastes were given full expression and she and her husband had become the adopted and loved of the community. When death parted them she was left a widow of a young man, and a separation of some years. The young widow was struggling to make a living, and she had to be content with the help of her mother. She was a woman of great strength of character and she was a woman of great faith. She was a woman of great courage and she was a woman of great love. She was a woman of great wisdom and she was a woman of great grace. She was a woman of great beauty and she was a woman of great charm. She was a woman of great power and she was a woman of great influence. She was a woman of great honor and she was a woman of great respect. She was a woman of great dignity and she was a woman of great nobility. She was a woman of great greatness and she was a woman of great glory. When automobiles first came into use there was a considerable number of people who declared that nothing would ever get them into an automobile. We hear the same thing said about airplanes today. The person who has not ridden in an automobile is an exception and in 20 years the same will be true of the airplane. The news stories in the dailies indicate that this country is becoming air minded about as rapidly as it became automobile minded.

Valuable Discovery in

Tuning Church Bells

A church bell made from the finest bell metal may give forth a harsh, unpleasant sound, due to the fact that it is out of tune with itself. The stroke of a single bell sounds to us like one note, and until very recently even the most expert bell makers have not realized that the sound is really made up of five separate notes. The five notes must be in tune with one another in order that the bell may give forth a harmonious sound. What we then hear is a combination of what is known as the strike note; the nominal, which is an octave above the strike note; the hum, which is an octave below, and the third and fifth.

This recent discovery regarding the harmonies of bells has made possible the new art of bell tuning, a revival of what for two centuries was considered a lost art. The large bells are inverted on a huge turntable and revolved while the metal is pured away from the inside until it is correctly shaped to produce the harmonious tones.—Kansas City Star's Science Service.

Power of Calculation

in Infants' Instinct?

Andre Lenoir, a Belgian boy, is stated to be able, at the age of two years, to multiply any two five-figure numbers accurately and without hesitation. Whether this is an exaggeration or not I am unable to say, but every now and then the phenomenon of the "calculating boy" crops up and astounds the world. The feats of these wonder children appear to be done by a sort of instinct, and sometimes the apparently magical power is lost as soon as a real knowledge of mathematics is gained.

A well-known calculating boy was George Parker Bidder, who was born in 1800, and was exhibited in his childhood as an arithmetical marvel. He became an engineer and was associated with Robert Stephenson in the London and Birmingham—afterward the London and North-Western railway—and was a founder of the Electric Telegraph company and president of the Institution of Civil Engineers. Among his best-known works are the Victoria docks.

Profits in Marsh Land

With proper care a bit of marshland, generally considered worthless, may be made to yield a profit. The tendency has been to drain such a piece of land and then cultivate it. Sometimes this works out, but often not. Instead of this, such wet areas may be more successfully utilized for the production of fish, wild ducks and geese, and beaver and muskrats. Wet areas may also be made to produce vast quantities of food suitable for feeding and producing millions of ducks, geese and other waterfowl, and certain fur bearers—animal life that would add materially to our supplies of attractive food as well as afford recreation through hunting, with either camera or gun.

Towns With Historic Names

Names famous in British history and literature are found in a small district of southern Ontario, Canada. Here is the city of London, one of the most important of the province, located on the Thames river. Less than fifty miles away is the city of Stratford, which, as in the Shakespearean tradition, is located on the Avon. Nearby is a town which bears the name of the great dramatist, while another community in the region is called Waterloo. Not far from Stratford is the city of Kitchener, which, before the World War was called Berlin.—New York Times.

Pet Squirrel in Church

The strains of Lohengrin resounded through a Kansas City church just as the last "I do" was repeated at the blossom-laden altar, a bit of fur dropped lightly to the sill of a nearby window. A flash of gray and Perky, the bride's pet squirrel, landed squarely on his mistress' head. He sat bolt upright on his throne of orange blossoms and lace, his bushy tail curled over his back, and gave the audience stare for stare. After a slight pause the bridegroom gravely removed Perky from his seat and unceremoniously dropped him out the window.

Take Warning

A man who owns one of those frayed-out bungalows on Long Island and entered a large sporting goods house to purchase a canoe. The sales man tried to sell him a launch. Finally he left without buying anything. "I wanted a canoe," said the man. The salesman got me interested in a launch. Then I became disinterested with a canoe and got having money enough to get a launch I didn't buy anything!"

Super salesmanship.—New Orleans Item-Tribune.

His Classification

He was a good-tempered little man and very chatty, and it was unfortunate that he should have got into so dull a carriageful of passengers. He beamed upon them all, and tried to start a conversation in two or three directions, but without success. Silence reigned; the interest in newspapers was intense. The snubbed one, too, sank into silence, but at the first stopping place he got out, and before slamming the carriage door, witheringly remarked, "Waxworks, by gum!"

Sits Up, Feels Better. Tainted Football. Mr. Hoover's Tasks. Another Big Airboat.

WALL STREET felt better, sat up and took notice, feebly.

The question is not "what had happened to the nation, in spite of warnings," but "what, if anything, has happened to the nation, and its general prosperity?"

James Simpson, of Chicago, head of Marshall Field & Co., comes into contact with thousands of merchants all over the country, knows what business they are doing and understands general conditions as well as any man in the United States; he replies to a question thus:

"I am a firm believer in the doctrine which you preach, don't buy on margin, and don't sell America short. The present liquidation in the stock market is not due to nor does it reflect general business conditions throughout the country. In the long run prices of securities must be determined by their yield and earnings on an investment basis. I believe basic business condition sound and that production and consumption of goods in most lines have been fairly well balanced. Beyond this, there appears to be no evidence of speculation in commodities such as that which occurred in nineteen hundred and twenty. The present liquidation in the stock market was inevitable and unless it goes too far and becomes too drastic, I am inclined to think, will be helpful to the business situation rather than harmful."

No buildings were burned down, no industries have died, no mines, railroads, steels have vanished.

Paper profits have been reduced to scraps of ticker tape, that's all.

And, as one solemn banker said: "Many will now do more useful work than watching the ticker or the brokers' blackboard."

The Carnegie Foundation says college football is "tainted by money."

Free teaching and cash bonuses are given to young men who can kick hard, run fast and tackle savagely.

It would be more pleasing if colleges sought great teachers as eagerly as they seek great quarterbacks.

But no great harm is done. The games and great crowds arouse young men's interest in college life and give college education to young men from rolling mills and war ends of the wagons who might otherwise remain uneducated.

President Hoover, with professional delight, in a fine engineering work, praises the all-year round navigation development of the Ohio River, now completed.

That development of the Ohio River is a development of most similar projects that has been planned.

How many of the great Hoover projects are still in the air?

No man ever had more opportunities, or better equipment for using them.

The last of them should be connected with the great idea of the Means, the idea of the means to the end, the idea of the means to the end.

The means to the end, the means to the end, the means to the end.

The means to the end, the means to the end, the means to the end.

The means to the end, the means to the end, the means to the end.

The means to the end, the means to the end, the means to the end.

The means to the end, the means to the end, the means to the end.

The means to the end, the means to the end, the means to the end.

STOPPED CHILD'S COUGH

Adamson's Balm, that wonderfully reliable cough medicine, stopped this boy's coughing with two doses.

As quick as it touches the inflamed throat it relieves soreness. Quickly releases throat mucus and expels attacking phlegm—coughing stops. Other ingredients attack the germs at seat of trouble and in a day or two all danger is gone.

Because Adamson's Balm works so quickly and surely—it's the favorite all over New England (contains no dangerous drugs, or other harmful ingredients). Try it for colds, sore throat, influenza or plain cough. Get it at all druggists.

MARGIE AND HER BIG ADVENTURE

(By D. J. Walsh.)

MARGIE BATES bent under the weight of the heavy suitcase. It contained every stitch of clothing she possessed, even to the absurd wrist-warmers that Grandma Nelson had upon her. These wrist-warmers had been an expression of the whole neighborhood felt at Margie from its midst.

It was a bitter morning upon which she was leaving home for the time in her eighteen years. She picked her way along the muddy street, the wind clattered the naked branches overhead. It seemed a long time before she came upon a car which a man was working. He was a friendly fellow.

"I never thought you would go," he said.

"I'm going to be anything or anything else," Margie replied.

"What does this mean, Margie?" she demanded. "I'm just starting for the city. I counted on you being there to see me through. And now—"

"It's all right, Margie, dear," Jean said, smiling. "The matron of the Girls' club is expecting you, and two of the girls will be at the station to meet you and make things pleasant for you. You'll get along just as well as if I were there."

"But why aren't you there?" persisted Margie.

John telegraphed. He said it was now or never with him. He just put his foot down hard. — Oh, what's the use? I may as well be frank about it to both of you. After all, you're John's friend as well as mine. I can't live without John. Business life is all right, but when a girl has to choose between it and the man that's loved her honest and true for two whole years, the man that will go on loving her to the end of her days—I suppose I sound like a fool," Jean ended lamely.

"You don't to me," Charlie said in a thick voice. He turned away. "Get into my car, Jean. I'll take you up to your folks. John didn't know you were coming, or he'd be here by this time."

"I never told a soul," Jean said. "Goodbye, dear," Charlie said. He tried to smile. "Your train's coming, Margie. I'll help you aboard."

The train came in and stopped. Margie took two steps toward it. Then she turned and looked pitifully into the man's face. Charlie was white; his lips were set in a gray line.

"Oh, I can't— I can't— she sobbed. Jean didn't say a word when Margie got into the car beside Charlie.

"I'm a quitter; they'll make fun of me, but I don't care," Margie said. "Money and adventure and lots to see aren't everything," Jean said patting her shoulder.

"It wasn't that," Margie laughed, unsteadily. "I just remembered that Alice Burton wrote me the other day that if I went away she was coming back to get Charlie herself. She would, too."

Charlie looked at her with joyous eyes.

"Don't you believe it, Margie. I'd have waited for you till I was as old as Methuselah," he declared.

Sea Levels

In general there is no difference in sea level between the different oceans. According to investigations made by the Navy department, however, there is a slight difference in level between the two ends of the Panama canal. The sea level at the Pacific end is found to be about seven inches higher than the Atlantic end. This may be due to ocean currents or to an actual difference in level between the two oceans. A report of the coast and geodetic survey giving determinations of mean sea level along the coasts of the United States, in relation to the lines of level carried across the continent, would indicate that the Pacific is about two feet higher than the Atlantic.

MANY ISOLATED SPOTS IN U. S.

Uninhabited Areas of Country About Which Little Is Known.

Washington—The disappearance of an airplane in New Mexico, and the four-day search before its wrecked remains were found, emphasize the fact that in the heart of the United States are uninhabited areas, some even unseen for long periods by the eye of man. A bulletin from the Washington, D. C. headquarters of the National Geographic society deals with some of these blank spots on the map of the United States.

"Uncle Sam and his states have taken fairly complete stock in the East," says the bulletin. "Surveying instruments came over with the early colonists and were put to immediate use. Since those early days lines of some sort have been run over almost every square mile of territory east of the Mississippi river."

"But although the eastern states have been rather thoroughly surveyed and are on the whole heavily populated, they are not free from isolated areas in the forests of north central Maine, extensive regions, for many months of the year, still know only the hunter and the trapper. In certain sections of the high Appalachians live families of isolated mountaineers whose domains are seldom visited by outsiders."

"The only actual blank spots in the eastern United States, however, are in the swamp regions of southern Florida. There are relatively large tracts that have not been surveyed or mapped."

Large Blank Spots.

"It is only after the Mississippi river has been crossed, going westward, that the extensive blank spots appear. Portions of northeastern Minnesota are almost wildernesses; but the areas are not great; and, as in the remote sections of Maine, hunters and trappers traverse the country. The bad lands of southwestern South Dakota form a sizable area, largely barren, in which only a handful of people live; and similar areas are found in northern Nebraska, and eastern Wyoming and Montana."

"All along the Rocky mountains from Canada into New Mexico are uninhabited and practically inaccessible mountain fastnesses. In Texas there are still unfamiliar areas in the 'Big Bend' region, close to the Mexican border, where the Rio Grande river makes a loop far to the south."

"In all this country, however, as is noticeable by reference to a large-scale map, no very large areas are free from what the mapmaker calls 'culture marks'; trails, roads, highways, rail ways, power lines, dams, canals, flumes, factories, villages, towns, and cities—the evidences that man has invaded and taken for his own much of the territory."

"The really remote regions, untouched by man, can be tested by this matter of map making. In the eastern states maps show railways and highways so close together that they form a fine-meshed network over the entire country. In the first tier of states west of the Mississippi river this network is still closely spaced; but farther to the west the lines become fewer and the unlined spaces greater. In the mountain and interior mountain states are the largest areas untraced by culture lines."

"Again the story is told by the maps showing the township surveys of the United States general land office. These square subdivisions have been laid out in general over the surface of all the states west of the Mississippi except Texas. Texas has been excepted because much of that state's area was owned by the United States before it entered the Union, and all public lands were specifically retained by the state."

Big Blank Areas.

"Only a few relatively small desert and mountain spaces in New Mexico have not been divided into townships by land office surveys. But farther west large spaces appear on the map. The largest of the blank spots shown in southwestern Arizona north of the diagonal line that marks the Mexican boundary from the United States. The international boundary commission has surveyed the actual boundary and an adjoining strip two miles wide to the south line a region that is 200 miles from east to west and from 20 to 50 miles wide that has not been mapped.

"This is one of the most conspicuous of the blank spots on the map of the United States. Other relatively unknown regions of considerable size (aside from Alaska, where there are extensive unexplored tracts) lie in northwestern Arizona, north of the Grand Canyon; in southern Nevada and eastern California, along the boundary between the two states; in Utah and southwest of Great Salt Lake, and in southeastern Utah. The latter region was explored in 1924 by an expedition of the National Geographic society which found an area of hundreds of square miles consisting of deeply eroded clay, shale and sandstone, with the sparsest of vegetation. Throughout an extensive area the explorers found not a single human inhabitant and very few animals and birds."

"The United States has literally thousands of isolated spots of small extent in which an airplane might crash and its wreckage remain unused for weeks. But the isolation of most of these places is relative. Many are only a short distance from the beaten paths. It is significant that Mount Taylor, on which the recent crash occurred, is only ten miles from a transcontinental railway and an improved highway, and is plainly visible from both. It is in a region that has been well mapped and is part of a forest reserve that is frequently patrolled. If a plane should crash in one of the real blank spots of the United States, its fate might remain unknown for months."

Boy, 13, Builds Plane;

Won't Fly It Himself

Memphis, Texas—Construction of an airplane by a thirteen-year-old boy is said by Memphis residents to mark the city as the home of one of the youngest plane builders in the country.

Bobby Ragsdale, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Ragsdale, will have his plane completed in a few weeks. He is building it in the rear of a local garage where he has worked every day except Sunday since school closed last May.

L. E. Clark, garage employee, has aided young Ragsdale in doing the welding and metal work and James G. Hammond helped to cover the wings.

The engine develops 28 horse power. It was bought in Fort Worth by Bobby.

Bobby expects to get an experienced pilot to try out the plane. "I am too young," he says. The test flight will be made either in Amarillo or Wichita Falls. "I want to learn to fly before I try this machine," the youthful builder added.

World's Debt to Monks

In the dark ages, not only were religion and education kept alive in the monasteries, but the sciences were nurtured. Gregor Mendel became famous for his experiments with plants; Monk Ghibio d'Arce invented scales and rules for metric measurement; stained glass windows are attributed to a monk; many devices in printing and bookbinding were first developed by monks; and many of the world's great libraries were founded by monks.

Elephant Herd "Bound" by Black Man's Magic

Major Court-Trent of the Cape Cairo motor expedition was the first white man who hunted and killed elephants in the Sudan. "While I was on this spear-hunting safari," he said, "we followed several herds into the waterless country in the Bahari-Gharat district of the Sudan, where the elephants usually trek to water only every third or fourth night. When they do, nothing will stop them. We followed this particular herd all day, and at night I was ready to give up. I made camp and stopped. Babala, a young hard-bitten Mandala hunter, who was said to be something of a magician, then came to me and said he thought he could 'bind' the herd with his magic rope. These 'magic ropes' are not uncommon in Africa. They are usually about a yard long and made of Dompalm fiber. Babala sat down with the rope in his hands, and went through the motions of tying his arms, legs, ankles and neck, uttering incantations as he did so. His muscles became taut, and he relaxed into a semi-trance. He sat so for a few minutes, and then suddenly relaxed, grunted 'That is good,' and rose to his feet. Next morning we ran into the elephants only half a mile from camp, and killed one! They were almost stationary. By all reckoning they should have been miles away."

Should Have Used More—or Less—Observation

With all due respect to their sex, women are touchy, and it behooves all men—especially married men—to use considerable tact and diplomacy in dealing with them. The following incident supplies its own moral: Mr. and Mrs. Hampden had returned from a dinner dance and were discussing the affair "far into the night." Hampden unguardedly mentioned the gown worn by a certain woman and expressed his keen appreciation of it. Mrs. Hampden was quiet for a while. Then the blow fell: "Did you like my gown?" she asked sweetly. "It was awfully becoming," answered hubby. "Which one did I wear?" she countered with a trace of coolness in her voice. Hampden was stumped. He could not recall just which of her gowns she had worn. He'll use a little more diplomacy—and observation—the next time.—New York Sun.

The Wrong Kind

Two chorus girls were bragging about their admirers and the gifts they had received from them. "Why," said one, "I once had a lovely brooch set with gems. There were 12 of them, and it was a beauty." "Oh, well, that's nothing," said another girl. "I had more than a hundred 'gems' given me once and by the same man."

There was a chorus of incredulous "ohs" from the other girls, but the speaker held her ground, protesting that she was telling the truth. Finally it occurred to some one to ask what sort of gems they were. "Well," was the rather reluctant answer, "they were 'gems' from a horrid poet."

Hot Stuff

Smoke rolled to the heavens. Flames leaped from the top of the doomed building. Suddenly a tall, emaciated man broke through the fire lines and strode rapidly into the blazing building, unprotected by gas mask or rubber coat. Immediately the flames died down, the smoke rolled away and the fire went out. The gaunt stranger strolled peacefully out of the building with a satisfied look on his face. "Who are you, anyhow?" asked one of the crowd.

"I'm the retired fire-eater from Barnum and Bailey, and that's the first square meal I have had for years!"—Pathfinder Magazine.

Let us turn for a minute from the quaint names in the Manchester war area to a Nova Scotia report that a railroad is proposed between Shediac and Peggwash.

"Fish that change from black to white have been discovered off the Bahamas." We have known of many fishermen who could do this with a story, but never of fish.

Richards reads Uncle Sam about $4,000,000 a year; yet the old boy seems to get down to office every morning and does quite a bit of work in those spare 12 months.

A man 1,700 years old has been found in the ruins of an ancient temple in Greece. Let's see—1,700 years old—would that be the one about falling down and getting boom?

A new record was set recently on one of those childlike tables in a tea room. It seems an absent-minded duffer ate three salads under the impression that they were fish.

The joke about walking back from a ride in the country seems to have reached the New York Times, which heads a letter from a nature lover, "Rescuing Roadside Beauties."

Having been served a hot dog at a New York gas station, a tourist says it is now possible in the East to buy a lunch of some kind at every place of business, except possibly a quarry.

CHURCH ACTIVITIES

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH
L. A. Edwards, Pastor
9-30 Church School, Miss Ida Packard, Superintendent.

10-45 Morning Worship. Subject of pastor's sermon, "The power of the tongue." A man is known by at least five things: What he is; what he does; what he gives and what he says. In this discourse we shall concentrate upon what he says.

It is said of some people that they set their tongue running and then go off and leave it. While this can not be literally true, yet I fear that often we do not give very serious consideration to what our tongue is saying. The wise man said: "Whoso keepeth his tongue, keepeth his soul from trouble." And he might have added, and also the souls of other people.
